All artworks displayed in the Museum for the Artifact Art Project will be in areas that are open to the public. As the objects are not considered to be a part of the Museum's collections (whether permanent or on loan) while in the building, they will not be kept behind protective barriers. "Do Not Touch" signs will be placed as reminders for all visitors, but the Museum is not responsible for any damage that may occur while the artworks are on display. Please do not include items of high personal or monetary value in the artworks. Please sign here to acknowledge that you have read this information.

* Each artifact on display is identified by a number. By supplying the number on this form, you are confirming the exact artifact that is inspiring the artwork, as a picture of the artifact will be placed near the artwork. You can also use this number to look up information about the artifact, including detailed pictures, on the Museum's website (<https://www.spurlock.illinois.edu/collections/search-collection/>).
